Legal Services Pathway - The Legal Services Pathway prepares students with the skills required to work in Court-related Investigation. Students will have opportunities to observe attorneys in the courtroom, the classifications of crimes and the importance of good communication skills and record keeping.

Court-related Investigation – This major prepares students for careers in criminal investigation. Students examine the historical background, professional direction, processes, purposes, functions, ethics, administration and technical problems of municipal, state and federal legal systems. They study the classifications of crimes and the effects of legal decisions upon criminal law. They learn the principles of criminal procedures and the laws, rules and types of evidence admissible in court. Students in this major have an opportunity to observe attorneys, paralegals and other law professionals during an internship where they will apply skills in communications, records keeping, interviewing and report writing.
